Executive Coaching Firm Relocates Headquarters to Downtown Cincinnati

CINCINNATI, OH (July 21, 2008)—Local executive coaching firm Baker & Daboll is moving its international headquarters from the city of Mason to the E.W. Scripps Building in downtown Cincinnati in order to serve its growing roster of clients located in Cincinnati and Northern Kentucky.

Bucking the recent trend of businesses that are moving their headquarters out to the suburbs, Baker and Daboll is moving from the suburbs to the city core to better meet the needs of its growing business and to serve customers with greater efficiency and enhanced customer service. This move also reduces the company’s carbon footprint because they will be operating in the city, where most of the firm’s clients are located, rather than the suburbs.

“It makes perfect sense at this time of rising gas prices for our offices to be downtown,” said Todd Uterstaedt, President and CEO of Baker & Daboll. “Our new location is more centrally located for our team of executive coaches. In addition, we are committed to the success of downtown Cincinnati development, and want to play a small part in assisting in its renaissance and revival with our presence here. We are very excited to be downtown.”

As baby boomers retire in growing numbers, many downtown-based companies are undergoing significant succession planning activities, and these companies have retained Baker & Daboll’s services to ensure successful leadership transitions. Baker & Daboll has been assisting in the development and preparation of new leaders from industries as diverse as banking and finance to manufacturing and logistics.

“Many leaders are asking us to help assess their candidates so they can determine who the best people are. We help them in a systematic and usable way with our assessment methodologies and coaching, which helps them make the right decisions,” said Uterstaedt.
