Executive Coaching Firm Continues Strong Growth Trend by Adding Top-Notch Talent

CINCINNATI, OH (March 25, 2009)—Executive coaching firm Baker & Daboll is pleased to announce that Amy J. Katz, Ph.D., has joined the firm as chief learning officer and senior executive coach. In January, the firm announced 19 percent revenue growth in 2008. Baker & Daboll’s expansion continues with the addition of Katz to their team.

Katz is a leader in the field of organization development and executive coaching, and contributes 25 years of training and development experience to Baker & Daboll. She has worked in the healthcare, manufacturing, and research and development industries. She has consulted for family businesses and currently teaches as an adjunct faculty member in the psychology departments at both Xavier University and the University of Cincinnati. This varied background and strong combination of coaching experience is one of Katz’s assets.

“Amy Katz will be leading our fast-growing team coaching practice,” said Todd Uterstaedt, president and CEO of Baker & Daboll. “She has a premier reputation in the field of team coaching and development. Her experience as a manager and leader, her Ph.D. in social psychology and experience helping leaders reach previously unattainable goals allows her to achieve results. Amy will provide substantial value to our clients in business, healthcare, government and academic settings.”

A prolific published writer, Katz has authored numerous publications in the organization development field. She has presented at several national professional conferences, including the American Society for Training and Development, the Academy of Management and the Association for Quality and Participation.

Katz is a Cincinnati native and a resident of Hyde Park.
